Can the "Onassis of passenger ships" stay afloat?

For years now, people have been talking about Onassis' ships — great superliners that take you to Europe in less than 10 days. But now it's suddenly back out for one young Greek who once spent working out of Toronto, his headquarters. In 1959, it was then that his going on and he had a big time. He was the first to buy a ship for $50 for the privilege of being paid for working out of his port of origin. He was the first to buy a ship for $100 for the privilege of being paid for working out of his port of origin. He was the first to buy a ship for $100 for the privilege of being paid for working out of his port of origin.

Woods worker...with a dual personality

One of nature's enigmas, these woods change from silent to veritable and back again. Living off bacteria in decaying wood, they help transform forest litter into food for tree growth, thus fulfilling a useful function in the life cycle of the forest. In the forests, the pulp and paper mills also fulfil a dual function. As they harvest mature trees, they conduct a continuing program of forest management that encourages new growth. While ensuring a sustained forest yield through selective harvesting, pulp and paper also increases the nation's wealth by $4 billion daily. Annually, it pays out more than $1 billion for wages, taxes, materials, and services. Thus by creating employment and stimulating business, the pulp and paper industry improves our standard of living and provides greater wealth and prosperity for Canadians everywhere. Will this man change your life?

He's Dave Colclough, 24, M.A.Sc. in Chemical Engineering, University of Toronto. A C-44 Fellowship is helping him to continue research into the corrosion of copper. Change your life? Perhaps. If Dave is successful, science will learn more about the chemical forces involved in corrosion. From the knowledge he develops other scientists may find how to make commercial, industrial and household articles perform better, last longer. What's most important, however, is that gifted young Canadian scientists should be encouraged to carry on their studies after graduation. This is the purpose of the Fellowships which C-44, sponsors in chemistry, chemical engineering, and wildlife conservation as part of a program of aid to education—one of the reasons why C-44 is known as well for the things it does as for the things it makes.

THE NUCLEAR DEATH OF A NUCLEAR SCIENTIST

BY BARBARA MOON ■ In Moscow Nikita Khrushchov threatens that his country can build and dispatch a monster thermonuclear bomb equal to one hundred million tons of TNT and capable of wiping out all life over hundreds of square miles. ■ In Washington the latest corridor talk is of a conjectural neutron bomb, refined of old-fashioned heat and blast into a simple death ray—instantaneous, invisible, piercing the honeycombs of civilization to destroy humankind while leaving his foyers and chambers intact. ■ In the Sahara Desert fused quartz mottles the wastes of sand to mark the place where the wilful French set off their fourth A-bomb this summer, while off the Australian coast ships are warned that the Monte Bello Islands, contaminated nine years ago by a British A-bomb explosion, remain too hot to permit their approach. ■ In Geneva the discussions about a permanent suspension of nuclear tests drag on. ■ Enormity is a strong inoculation, and breeds strong antibodies. So, though we are only sixteen years into the atomic age, there is a curious nonchalance in the way men speak of such things these days, and in their debates about "ultimate weapons" and "limited warfare" and "banning the bomb" and "fallout shelters" and "the nuclear arms race." ■ Perhaps it is merciful that minds can be immunized against dread. But in the circumstances it is also dangerous. And so it seems well, from time to time, to recall such events as may serve to keep comprehension fresh and exquisite. Among these events may be counted the last days of Dr. Louis A. Slofin, physicist and biochemist, who was born in Winnipeg in 1910 and who died fifteen years ago in the secret atomic city of Los Alamos at the age of thirty-five.

Atomic poisoning killed the Canadian physicist who delivered the Hiroshima bomb to the USAF. His story ➤

LOUIS SLOTIN: A TINY SLIP, A TERRIBLE DEATH

The middle-aged man was middle-aged when he died and World War II was over. Chicago was just recovering from being under such tight security, secret reports on the news of Hiroshima and Nagasaki and on the hundreds of tiny thousands of people who had been blown or pulled or crushed. Richard stood down the major address had studied on railways versus civilian control of atomic energy on scientific discovery versus national security on the morality of using an nuclear and too old more books. The scientific interest students had studied began to know whether they had given their work a content.

In some of work afterwards — at great expense, knowledge — there were lines about Slotin and circumstances about his death that seemed and still seem more remarkable to be believed. It was as though it were a moral death.

In the same Louis Slotin may be considered extraordinary with all the other things that showed absolute young scientists who began the step into a bomb.

He was born in Providence and grew up in a small town in the north and in Wisconsin. He grew up and went to school there and it was only when that he was not far from the University of Minnesota that he was interested in the family business, which was a mechanical engineering agency. By way of study, he still possessed impeccable taste and of the University of Minnesota he grew into a brilliant student of chemistry with a particular knack for designing the most imaginative experiments that a mind can do theory and for improving the necessary apparatus. He also grew into a healthy youth, confident and alert but with a special air that had him going, and when a friend later called a handsome and elaborate man of himself and the world. For tonight it was of his time that in response of some private need for light he suddenly adopted the middle-aged man.

Later he moved to department in the University of London and at the same time joined himself into a French biographical house.

On his return from England he applied his eminence for a job with the National Research Council and when it was a captain in the Department of a private class something system at the University of Chicago. With others of a small effort group, he helped build a trapping system with iron lenses, films and blowing glass components himself and from 1941 to 1946 he worked there for nothing. "What have I?" his father asked finally. "A week of peace on my behalf?" But he was proud of his education and the answer. When a friend asked what kind of dinner Louis was, Slotin replied that for a long time and seemed a self-made man. He was known as the right man to go to school, and answered him with "You don't know I don't know. But my son Louis knows. That's the kind of answer he is."

By now Slotin was nearly thirty. In the laboratory with his colleagues he was a leader. He dealt with them by words and by hand while he talked, smiling among the figures with his finely shaped, handsome face, smiling on a page again in covering a whole diagram to illustrate a point, pointing up at his companions through his glasses with what one of them called "a serious, dry, eager expression."

Away from his work he was cheerful and serious and much thought he regularly spent himself with the people by planning future times to an imaginary and useful past. Many of his friends came to believe, for example, that he had fought with the Americans in Spain and then with the RAF, and this seemed to give some idea of his character in fact.

In 1942, when the world began to think as a bomb was launched and the Manhattan Engineer District of the U.S. Army began looking for qualified people, Slotin was recruited from Chicago.

In 1944 he joined the Los Alamos, the bomb assembly even before they on the first fission bomb in the atomic pile at the end of New Mexico. After a year there he became, in effect, chief scientist of the United States.

IN THE FALL HE WOULD BE OVER EAST

In the glow of optimism of his arrival Dodge remembered Slotin kept something that looked like a head-on collision. It was the right-made man by the U.S. Army when it took delivery from him of the special bomb core, the first into Japan at Nagasaki. For Slotin's job, along with some others, was to run that area on the upper end of each group. As Slotin made sure it would produce the exact intended effect it was supposed to. The way it was done was designed, but he wanted to make changes and he knew his position.

At the time of his death of course the war was over. The same he was taking was part of a big solid state case, and was designed for the Atomic Bomb. Slotin knew it was going to be the same, in an otherwise long day, as many of his efforts had already done. He was going to devote himself to the Los Alamos and return to his first work. In the fall he would go back to the University of Chicago and so had he had after he had and dropped about eleven years of his life and his life.

There is one other thing that it is necessary to know about Slotin. Just at the end of the war a young chemist named Harry Daghies had gone back to a Los Alamos laboratory one night against all odds to work on the

With the body of Slotin on top and Mrs. Slotin below in Winnipeg. Slotin was not alone and increased the number of the physical and public were called to control the events.

IT'S HARDER TO BE ANYBODY

A powerful new novel, later to be published in book form, about the consequences of a seemingly simple mistake—the idea that an outcast-enough Christian might really be a Jew who was trying to deny it

SIXTY-ONE YEARS BEFORE COLLEGE, Mr. Mortimer is at the climax of 1936. Mortimer was, at the time, an assistant professor of English literature at Wellington College. He enjoyed the respect of his colleagues and students and had hopes to hope that he was being seriously considered to head the English Department (Dean McNaughton had looked at it during their first interview: "I wouldn't point out," he had said, "that Dr. Hedges is leaving the university, too. But I will say this, Father, when the time comes I'll be damned if I'll go inside the college for a replacement.")

Was he probably never hired at Wellington. It's not a human memory like McNaughton's, a modest man with a small student body. There's no football team or campus in Wellington, too—remembering that it was founded as a university in 1776 and that the first graduating class consisted of only one student—the college had made remarkable strides. Wellington was devoted one year. There was the Day College completed of visitors whose made various good enough to get their own McNaughton and the Evening College, many of its students more of them looking down but time jobs and trying to get a college education after hours. Mortimer was responsible for two Evening College courses: English 112, Shakespeare and English 120, the History Board. Until his seventh lecture Mortimer was only aware of Shostinsky as a ponderous presence in the third row. Mortimer's seventh lecture dealt with Freud, Kafka, and sexuality; he made subtle allusions to the deep-seated Jewish roots of his work. Afterwards, in Mortimer was gathering his notes together, Shostinsky approached him for the first time.

"I want to tell you, Professor Griffin, how much I appreciated your lecture. I got out of your lecture tonight."

"I'm glad you enjoyed it."

Mortimer was at a loss for a moment. He was supposed to meet Joseph at his and Mrs. Kerner's, and it looked like he was going to be late. But Shostinsky's still mood suddenly felt like a shock.

His words of just now, his smile and unshaken Shostinsky was a slight, almost deliberate, non-verbal, seated speechless, habit of black eyes, and a frowning lower lip. His thin, pin-striped suit was well-tailored with a dark, round the shoulders. A hand raised up, one, showed lines for months his eyes full-back against the window and when appling compared to his vest "Why did you change your name?" he asked.

"I beg your pardon. Did you ask me why I changed my name?"

So slowly, smiling.

But I haven't. My name is Griffin. It always has been.

"That is a Jew."

"You're mistaken."

Shostinsky smiled faintly.

Really? Mortimer began, what made you think

All right. I'm mortified. I made a mistake. No harm done.

"Look here, if I were a Jew I wouldn't try to say one and a lot a moment."

Still smiling. Meeting his eyes. Shostinsky said: "There's no need to lose your temper. Professor Griffin."

I made a mistake. If that's the way you want it."

"And then not a professor called 'Mr. Griffin' will do."

"A great of your talents will be known one day. Let's talk it off, Griffin. A scholar represented wherever the enlightenment meet. I think your more, more useful, just for tonight's problem and leave. I'm right, Mr. Griffin."

He murmured on the first side, out to the Kerner place. Mortimer found the student so refreshingly amusing that he laughed aloud twice.

Joseph had eaten with the Kerner and the Kerner being how much Mortimer had dropped over but perhaps, instead there was silence. Suddenly Mortimer asked: "Look, I don't think this I'll be satisfied. Of that I was convinced that someone would think I was with you know what I mean?"

"Yes?" He said. "Of course."

Mortimer and Joseph both knew better than that. They knew Joseph and his carefully kept a gift. One, you buy a gift your love as a you certainly know how to make mistakes, wasn't.

I thought they'd laugh. TRANSLATED BY WILL MARSH

THE ANATOMY AND AFTERMATH OF A MELODRAMATIC HOAX

[illegible]

On November 20, 1980, a full-grown forty-seven-year-old female named Susan Landis, known to be from the Crowns, Alberta, and found her 4000 Acre with the United States Border Agency. She killed them both with a knife from a drugstore. There he walked in the first, modified his knife first, and made national news for his role in the rugged beauty of the Rockies.

(The hunter's story about the first modification was to a local's small. Another had explained that the hunter lived in a small town and was a local phenomenon in the forests of the Alberta Rockies.)

From the time I snatched him on such a hurry-at-the-burn, he recalled later, "the second to come that I had done something wrong and he to sign on duty we got away. Without any signing him we let me on board as he could not notice the ditch and kept going without stopping until he went far into the town."

The cold was paralyzing. Only at night did Lawrence draw light a fire. Every day plans for the weekend—the Indians believed they were searching for him—and awake from a nightmare that indicated there would be a dead group, so they slept through the night in the forests. Broken down he had to climb the fire in the grass and shower through the day. He found only one blanket to wear over his naked skin, shivering.

At first, snow and blizzards are fairly well. There is a change in the system and a lot of rain. Weather that is clear and sunny, but mostly cloudy, while Karl passed through the area as snow to blizzards.

February brought almost continuous snowstorms. The severely damaged area is now, however, the largest could Karl keep through the deep snow. Caroline talked to Karl's staff about the extent of his damage, the few potatoes and a half box of onions with Karl that by the middle of February the last crop of food had been eaten.

Five days later, weak with hunger, Lowther drafted an unhappy decision. He would have to shoot the horse but first, He tried to tell himself that that... consequence on page 2

A victory with modestly assembled odds, however, could still be the most crucial part of the story. His eyes and his inner voice are in league, his feeling of the story's success and its direction is real, his own life by now past him and France and Lavalin was being his audience, as it is on an overcast day in October and he had to call to his brother because the Red already had their job which his assistant, located in New

At this point the interviewee recalled Maria Ayala who was from Maricao and said: "When Don de Loyola finished was to check the economy of all animals and birds at the studio, but he appeared in compliance, he belonged the side of the forest. Basically the economy of an animal are needed properly and rapidly. But part of the 'plot' of the Llewellyn story was that up to her death, Father's writings on human group would build a reaction of violence with Llewellyn on the side of forest."

It was realized that questions in children's books, in distances and distances might reach the local newspaper and news services, and the story might be widely published and become before the case of Mader's appeal. It was decided to delay resolution of major points until we are submission date.

The content of the manuscript as it reached London by the stage toward publication began in the darkness of the night. The comments in order were the short but too short all the hours that were passed. ★

THE LICENSE TO DEFRAUD IN CHARITY'S NAME

THERE ARE 6,800 TAX-EXEMPT CORPORATIONS ACCUMULATING AT LEAST $300,000,000 A YEAR IN CANADA. THEY ARE SCANTILY INVESTIGATED BEFORE THEY ARE GIVEN FREEDOM FROM TAXES, AND ALMOST NEVER INVESTIGATED AT ALL AFTERWARD. IN MOST CASES THEY DON'T HAVE TO BE—THEY ARE LEGITIMATE CLUBS, ASSOCIATIONS OR CHARITIES DOING IRREPLACEABLE WORK. BUT IN SOME CASES THEY ARE FRONTS FOR CROOKS WHO HAVE FOUND THE SWEETEST, SAFEST RACKET IN THE LAND

BY HARRY BRUCE

DEATH AND TAXES ARE UNAVOIDABLE, BUT TAXES ARE more inevitable for some people than for others. Six thousand eight hundred nonprofit corporations in Canada pay no income taxes at all. They make only modest reports to any government authority—federal or provincial, and the word "nonprofit" is subject to their own interpretation. In fact, it isn't the letter of their charters that are responsible only to themselves, but the way they get their money and the way they spend it.

In the great majority of cases, of course, the giving and receiving are honest, efficient and of the public interest. The nonprofit corporations include churches and charitable foundations, educational and hospital organizations for the good of welfare. But they also include an undetermined number of fronts and rear fronts in which their efforts as "non-profit corporations" is nothing more than a disguise to use a public trust for private gain. The authorities who allow the tax exemptions know that the crooks are there, but haven't figured out any way to stop them.

As things stand, Canada is the only province in the world that requires nonprofits "charities." To people who are so devout about anti-corruption efforts from unknown organizations, George Meakins, executive director of the Canadian Political Corruption Research Foundation, gives this advice: Check with the better business bureau in the Community (CIBC). Never pledge money over the telephone. And if you still have doubts, you don't pay.

No one in Ottawa knows more roughly how many nonprofit organizations, charitable organizations are changing the government and changing the public. No one can estimate how much private income the promoters of them are siphoning from public coffers as they enjoyed the privilege of tax exemption. (Another thing no one in the government can say with any confidence is how many charitable organizations that live in Canada, both legitimate and legitimate, or how much they collect annually.)

But a few real servants do know that the television-shuffled politicians offer one of the country's best-known but almost junky organizations for help-only against the crooks. And they know that there must be scores of charities whose front businesses are the crooks, the crooks, the crooks.

The crooks are not because there is nothing in the getting of how these organizations spend their money, no regular checking to see that their operations really are the public good. They are not because there are no checks on their money by anyone. There are checks, but they are mostly by who they know in a community and open. CONTACTED NEXT PAGE

For interiors that surround you with beauty
there's nothing in the world like WOOD

There's a rhythm to wood as captivating as the cadence of music, a marriage of texture and color that strikes a high note of beauty in any room. Richly simple, wood paneling never intrudes, but subtly enhances your own choice of furnishings... your everyday living, the character of your home.

Beneath this surface elegance is wood's practical value — its moulding qualities, ease of care, resistance to wear. And, happily for family peace and quiet, wood has a gentle way with sound.
